OUR MELBOURNE LETTER.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 29.

WITH the festivities of Christmas not yet finished, and those of the new year impending, it would be rank treason to drag politics into a correspondent's letter; in fact, nobody has any politics for the time being. Some of the Melbourne importers and manufacturers are unable to forget the aggressive measures threatened by the manufacturers and importers of Sydney, and are, no doubt, still devising measures of a defensive character. Their numerous hands, however, seem to have been partially relieved of any danger to their prospects of employment in the coming year, for they have been giving themselves up to seaside haunts, and kiss-in-the-ring with all the abandon which is their wont at this lively time of the year, and they are no doubt quite ready to repeat the game during the latter half of the present week. The pursuit of pleasure is by no means confined to the class which supplies our factory girls and seamstresses, for our entire population from the highest to the lowest seem to manifest the same fondness for "putings," and every kind of hilarious enjoyment at this festive season. Wherever there are railways, the populations seem to be on the move—trains from out of Melbourne a living stream, while from all the provincial centres still larger streams flow into the metropolis. If the rest of all the pleasuring of one Christmas season could be bottled up, the enormous aggregate would furnish incontestable proof of the prosperity which generally prevails.

The bulk of the population of Melbourne and the suburbs are too fond of social and exciting amusements to give up a great National holiday to the contemplation of a game of cricket, whosoever may be the players. Hence, it was not expected that on Boxing-day there would be any very large proportion of the pleasure seekers to be found in Richmond paddock, nevertheless, strong proof was afforded of the renewed interest taken in the game by the presence of not less than 15,000 spectators on Boxing-day, and a still larger number on Saturday afternoon, when other attractions were fewer.

The daily telegrams will have kept your readers well informed of the progress of the match with the All-England Eleven, so that I need say very little about the scores or the principal incidents of the game. The visit of Mr. Grace and his team has undoubtedly had the effect of reviving the interest in the game which had for the past two or three years been suffering a palpable decadence, and this revival will, probably, endure for some time. Notwithstanding, however, that the general public have of late taken but slight interest in cricket, the young men who have adopted it as their pastime have acquired greater proficiency than they used to exhibit, and the eighteen who were selected to face the English eleven were admittedly a very superior lot of players. Nevertheless they laboured under this great disadvantage, that they were a miscellaneous collection chosen from several clubs; the choice was made only a few days before the match, and changes had to be made in the team up to the last hour. They had, therefore, no opportunity of practising together to any extent, and the match had to be played by this mere "fortuitous aggregation" against a compact and solid body working together in practised harmony. Moreover, there have been some recent squabbles amongst our players, which have rendered them anything but a happy family, and personal feuds have even threatened a disruption of the eighteen who were finally chosen. For these reasons the chances of the Victorians were not regarded very hopefully.

The Geelong factory women do not approve of the Female Labour Act recently passed, which directs that no women shall be employed in any of our factories more than eight hours a day. They prefer ten, and think that little enough to enable them to earn a decent living, as they are employed in piece work, and they have actually sent in a petition to the Chief Secretary to suspend that clause of the Female Labour Act which fixes the hours of labour so far as they are concerned, which the Chief Secretary after due inquiry on the subject has promised to do when the Act comes into force on Thursday next. It seems anomalous that whilst the Italian people were feasting Mr. W. C. Smith for getting this Act passed, the Geelong people were petitioning the Chief Secretary to stay its operation lest they should be starved out by it. In some of the Melbourne factories have women been employed more than eight hours a day, although working in piece work, and the Act was not therefore needed in their case. They had nothing to complain of, and never did complain—not even when the measure was before Parliament, although attempt was being made to get up a cry in its favour. Yet few objected to this piece of legislation, although it was predicted by many at the time that those for whose benefit it was passed would disown it, as some of them are already disposed to do.

The Clunes riot cases have ended just as might have been expected. The Government had nothing whatever to do with sending the police there, and withdrew from any active interference in the prosecution of the rioters. The result is that three or four miners have been had up before the magistrates and fined £5 each with costs, for their disorderly behaviour. The Mayor of Clunes is not, however, likely to be so tenderly dealt with, an explanation having been demanded by the Government from him in reference to his conduct on that occasion. The facts alleged against him, if true, show him to be a very unfit person for a seat on the Bench, however much his fellowtownsmen may commend his zeal in championing the miners.

The steam-hammer brought out to the colony in 1866, and which had ever since been lying at the Williamstown Railway depôt, but which had been placed in position in the yard attached to the railway workshops, and was tried for the first time on Wednesday last with satisfactory results. The cost of this stupendous hammer when imported was £1750, and another £1250 will have to be laid out on it before it is really in proper working order, so that it will have to do some work, and that of no small magnitude, or we shall have "paid too dearly for our whistle." It is a three-ton hammer, that is to say, strikes a blow which would be equal to that pressure, when allowed to fall of its own accord, but is capable of being forced by water or steam with a pressure equal to eighteen tons. When in full work ten men will be required to manage it, and it can be so arranged as to dispense with the required forces, from that of eighteen tons to the gentlest tap, which would scarcely bruise a pin or chip an egg shell. The bare fact of its having been allowed to fall of its own accord, but is capable of being forced by water or steam with a pressure equal to eighteen tons. When in full work ten men will be required to manage it, and it can be so arranged as to dispense with the required forces, from that of eighteen tons to the gentlest tap, which would scarcely bruise a pin or chip an egg shell. The bare fact of its having been allowed to be unused for so long a period, seems to indicate that such a formidable implement has not been much wanted here.

Some of our winegrowers are at last speaking out on the oppressiveness of the English wine duties on the colonial wines, and on the necessity for instant action in reference to them. "A Vignaron," evidently not a member of the "Melbourne Winegrowers' Association," writes to the Argus to compile of all sorts of prizes being offered for all sorts of things at the Agricultural and Horticultural Societies shows throughout the country, but needs for the keeper of the best vineyard. The chief ground of "A Vignaron's" complaint is this. He says, "It is a well-known fact that the arrangement of duty on imported wines in England is unjust to Australia. Our wines possess great alcoholic strength, and often pass the stipulated 26 per cent, and hence incur the higher instead of the lower rate. The coming Exhibition will present a favorable chance to make a move in this matter; yet there is not a word about it here; "not ever will be so long as the Melbourne Winegrowers' Association, whose wines are under 26 per cent, are allowed to rule the roast. They do not want competition.

A black cockatoo comes to us from Kyneton, not, let us hope, of the "three black crows" kind, but more truthful. Kyneton and the whole of the outlying districts in that direction have been again infested with locusts this season; but daylight has come in a most unexpected manner. Hitherto the common black crow could only be counted by the score around Kyneton and in the neighbouring districts, but now they are to be seen in hundreds of thousands, and are fast exhibiting an appetite for locusts which appears to be their only food. Where these countless multitudes of black crows came from is a sore puzzle to the gaping people, and whether they are to be feared or hailed as a blessing all gone is a question which gives some anxiety. However, it is to be hoped that the instinct which has led them to the district which they are now gorrfending will guide them to others which need their assistance, and we need not be over-anxious about their ultimate destination. The bustard (or wild turkey, as we call the bird) was found to be on the increase last season in some of the districts infested with the locusts, and the birds when caught were found to be in splendid condition. These are but illustrations of a well known law in natural history.

It is commonly reported that the land recently forfeited at the Wimmera has been dummied again, and that another Board will have to be constituted to inquire into the matter. This may be after all more conjecture, but it will only prove the absurdity of our land regulations if it should turn out to be true. The new selectors were under the impression that the improvements made on the forfeited lands would go to those who were fortunate enough to get them without any extra charge being made. In this however, they have been disappointed, the Crown claiming a right to these improvements, and the selectors only getting them at a proper valuation.

It is pleasant to find that the Sydney riflemen who came here to compete in the Volunteer Rifle Association matches have carried away with them such pleasant recollections of their reception and treatment. The little speech of Major Raymond, the umpire of your riflemen, in which he so gracefully and cordially acknowledges the hospitality shown to his men, has been noticed by our Press, and read with general interest. Moreover, it is not unsatisfactory to find that he noted several things worth copying by the Sydney rifles, and that, while treating your men with becoming hospitality, we were able to show them a thing or two worth their learning.

The battle cry which seems to have been raised in Sydney by Archbishop Vaughan has reached the ears of the Victorian public, and is commanding attentive thought. If a fresh contest is to be provoked between Roman Catholic and Protestant in Sydney, its effects will, of course, extend to this colony, and the Argus this morning gives a suggestive hint to Roman Catholics, that if the sentiment of Dr. Vaughan is endorsed by them, namely, that Allegiance to the Queen is of inferior obligation to his fealty to a foreign potentate, they must not be surprised if their fellow-countrymen look with disapproval on their appointment to offices of State, and generally regard their proceedings with suspicion.

The following rules are hereby established for the despatch of business in the Supreme Court, during the year 1874, and during the period from the 24th to 31st December, 1873:—

TERMS, SITTINGS FOR CAUSES, &c.—The terms of the Court, and the holidays and vacations to be observed therein, together with its sittings for causes, for the gaol delivery at Darlinghurst, and for Equity and Insolvency appeals, shall be those mentioned in the Law Almanac annexed hereto.

SPECIAL ADDITIONAL DAYS.—Provided that appeals in Equity and Insolvency and Insolvency and special cases may be heard on such additional days as may be appointed.

EQUITY APPEALS.—After the Sittings of Equity Appeals, on any of the days appointed for that purpose, such other business will be taken as the Judges or any two of them may direct.

SITTINGS IN EQUITY.—The Primary Judge will sit, in and out of term alike, on every Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday, except on the first Tuesday and Wednesday in term, on equity appeal days, and during the Judge's absence on circuit.

ECCLESIASTICAL MATTERS.—On Wednesdays in term, the Primary Judge will take only ecclesiastical matters, and matters which may (by law) be heard in his chambers before one Judge. On Wednesdays out of term, these matters will take precedence.

THE LIST.—Ecclesiastical motions and matters, and applications to a Judge or the Court in Insolvency (appeals excepted) shall be heard on every "Court" day, before the Primary Judge only.

FINAL AND SUPREME.—All schedules of fines and estreated recognizances shall be returnable on some Friday in term, at 10 o'clock, to be then heard before the Primary Judge.

CHAMBER BUSINESS.—Chamber business will ordinarily be taken on Tuesdays and Fridays, at 10 o'clock, in term and out of term alike. Provided that a summons may be returnable on any other day by order of a Judge. No chamber application will be entertained on a day, in or out of term (except in cases of emergency), after 1 o'clock.

SATURDAYS.—There will be no sitting of the Court in Sydney (except for the trial of prisoners and except the last day of term) on any Saturday. Provided that any argument or trial, not concluded on Friday, may be continued on Saturday, if the Court or presiding Judge shall think fit.

SETTING DOWN CAUSES.—To the extent limited for each day as next mentioned, causes shall be set down consecutively only. No more than four causes shall be set down for any day for trial by a jury of four persons, nor more than two causes for trial by a special jury, or three causes by a common jury. Provided that an additional number of causes, not exceeding two, may be set down for any day, if the Prothonotary shall see fit. For each day of the Sittings for Causes there shall be two separate Cause Lists, which will be taken respectively in the Judge and Jury Court—two Judges sitting for that purpose. And until both lists have been filled, in accordance with the preceding rule, no cause shall (except by leave of the Prothonotary, approved of in writing by a Judge) be set down in either list for any subsequent day.

HEARING OF TWELVE.—Provided that causes for trial by juries of twelve (whether special or common juries), shall be set down for such days only, as the Prothonotary shall in each case direct.

UNCONCLUDED CAUSES.—Any cause, not concluded on the last day of the sittings, may be continued on such day or days as the presiding Judge shall think fit.

TRANSFERRING CAUSES.—Causes on the list of Short Cases may be transferred to the list of the other by order of a Judge, for trial on the day next but one following, or any later day. Provided that no such day shall be earlier than that by which the cause was first entered.

HEARINGS GENERALLY.—Motions from any sitting will have precedence over other Causes; and shall be set down by the Prothonotary, each according to its appropriate List, for the next sittings.

CAUSES OF CIRCUIT.—Causes for trial in the Circuit Courts, respectively, shall be entered for the days specified for that purpose in the Law Almanac annexed hereto.

CAUSES RESERVED OR CIRCUIT.—Special Cases reserved on Circuit, or any Criminal Trial, shall be set down for hearing in Sydney (unless a Judge shall otherwise order) on the first Friday of the next Sittings for Causes.

MIDSUMMER VACATION.—The next sitting Vacation shall commence on the 24th December instant (instead of the 1st of January next, as at present ordered); and, for the purposes specified in the last Rule, no business will be taken during that Vacation, not during the July Vacation; nor shall any pleading be then filed or delivered, or proceeding be commenced, without leave of the Judge, into which Vacation it falls.

VACATION BUSINESS.—Provided that summonses, in cases of urgency, may be returnable in Chambers on any Friday; and that causes may be set down, and notice of trial (and to adopt) or produce documents be given; and all writs may be issued, executed, and returned, and all consequent proceedings be taken; for the purpose of an appeal, and for obtaining or dissolving any injunction. Summonses in Chambers will, during both vacations, be returnable on Fridays only.

MOTIONS NOT FOR NEW TRIAL.—All cases in which the usual summerhain has been filed in a motion, or for a new trial shall be entered in the order of filing, and be called on in that order on every day in term until disposed of.

PARTIES NOT READY TO PROCEED.—Every case called on, in which no counsel shall move, shall (unless the Court extends the time) be struck out of the paper with leave to the adverse party to sign judgment. And the like, where a rule nisi has been granted, and the moving party is not prepared to proceed.

FINAL MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL.—A filed memorandum, during all of cases, be necessary, under the rules of the 19th August, 1861; but where the cause shall have been during the term, or within the next day preceding the term, no motion in pursuance of such memorandum need be made earlier than the fourth day after the filing thereof.

RULES NISI FOR NEW TRIAL.—Every rule nisi for a new trial shall be entered and called on in the order in which it was granted; and the moving party shall (at all cases begin, and the party shewing cause follow one counsel having the reply.

PRECEDENCE OF BUSINESS.—Motions (if for new trials) will for every day except Friday have precedence of all other business. On Friday (Motions and Crown cases will have precedence, and then motions. On Tuesdays, motions will have precedence; but by leave of the Court, common motions may be taken on any day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS ON FRIDAY.—On every day, subject to the preceding rule, all matters in the Term Paper, for argument shall be heard, and called on and heard, in the order of their date. Rules nisi for new trials will be classed under this rule. All other rules in short cause (unless the Court shall otherwise order) will be entered for and heard on some Tuesday or Friday only.

CENTRAL POLICE COURT.

THURSDAY.

BARONESS MEURIER, Mission Station, Redfern.—Eight persons were fined in the usual penalties for drunkenness and obscene language.

WILLIAM BURNS was sentenced to be imprisoned seven days for furious behaviour in Clarence-street, and to be imprisoned one month for assaulting his constable who took him into custody.

JOHN ROBERTSON was sentenced to Quarter Sessions on his own recognizance, for the offence of trespass on the property of Michael Sennett, and also to be imprisoned for a penalty of £5, or to be imprisoned four days.

SARAH JOHNSON and WILLIAM WARD were charged by Rebecca Wright, their sister, with having assaulted her. She deposed that about 10 p.m. of Tuesday last, the defendants were quarrelling and cursing and using abusive language, and she (complainant) interfered on her behalf, whereupon they attacked her and gave her a black eye, and used such language as she did not like to repeat. Her husband, wounded in the head, and knocking her down (the female who had left with a bonnet and shawl, thinks it was Ward who pulled out a handfull of hair; the brother that kicked her in the mouth, and threatened the story; both defendants were under the influence of drink). From the cross-examination it would appear that the female before the Court and their mother had been drinking and quarrelling and fighting nearly the whole of the previous part of the day. To pay a penalty of 40s. each, or to be imprisoned one month.

Seven prisoners were discharged.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

SECOND DAY—AFTERNOON.

At the conclusion of the day's play on Friday it was arranged by the two captains that the match should commence at half-earlier, and accordingly play was resumed to-day shortly after 11 o'clock, when Greenwood and Humphrey alive of for Greenwood, Humphrey and Macintyre, who were late. They, however, put in an appearance shortly after the commencement. G. F. Grace opened the bowling by bowling a maiden to Mitchell and W. Grace followed with from the northern wing. Jos. After Clay had made a leg hit, the left-handed man was followed by a better from W. G. (11-7-247.) Greenwood followed, and was received with applause by a numerous circle of admirers, but he soon lost the company of Clay, who was bowlidly a shooter from G. F. Grace. (Pick-Bell) Bishop (the representative of the Cricket club) Pick-Bell part. Coastick began by playing steadily, but his partner soon vanished, and the All-England captain evidently knew Pick's weakness, for he bowled him a ball to hit, given let out at it, and the crowd began to applaud for joy. They considered a good hit, but Humphrey stepped out from near the fence, and the ball dropped into his hands, and was held, and Sam wended his way to the pavilion. (13-2-24.) Hedley succeeded to the crease, and a leg hit for 1 brought round from G. F. brought up 200; but the wickets were doomed to fall more rapidly than on the previous day, and Hedley was caught and bowled from W. G. by Gascoigne (14-1-262.) The redoubtable South Melbourne bowler, Allan, now appeared on the scene, and commenced with his usual antics, but it was of no use. Mr. Grace knew well his weakness, and the batsman quickly placed a ball beck into the bowler's hands. (16-0-252.) Hinton followed, and after scoring one gave Gascoigne a rather smart chance at short-leg, which he declined. He was, however, stumped by the following over of W. G. by Bush. (16-1-252.) Wyndham was the last man, and he is a tremendous hitter the field was a little extended. He commenced with a single from W. G., and in the few following overs added two batsmen inflosed a little fresh life and vigour into the game by stealing several runs. The fielding became rather loose, and several chances of runs were lost to the bowlers out were declined. (268 up.) After several more runs had been made Mr. W. G. Grace changed his bowlers position in the field, putting him close to the fence. The bowler (W. G.) bowled a particular ball, and Wyndham made a slashy hit, and the ball eventually landed in G. F.'s hands, thus bringing the innings to a close for the large score of 287 runs. Bishop carried out his bat, he last-placed man only added 19 runs to the score. Most of these right batsmen are good players, but somewhat inexperienced, and the All-England captain proved himself too knowing for them. It was a regular collapse, and it proves the necessity of having, if possible, players with plenty of experience. The majority of these men have played, but bowling with the greatest ease; but, judging from their batting on this occasion, they don't seem to be quite sure whether they were standing on their heads or their feet. G. F. Grace is an ordinary fast round-arm bowler, and his brother is slow round-arm. He bowls without any weight. keeper, and almost all his fielders are in front of the wicket.

After an interval of about a quarter of an hour, the eighteen took the field. By this time an immense concourse of spectators had assembled, representing closely on 20,000. The grand stand and lawn reserves were again crowded with a large number of ladies and gentlemen, who appeared highly interested in the progress of the game. The attendance was in all respects satisfactory, especially considering the charges for admission. Half-a-crown was charged at the gates, and 5s. more for the grand stand. The crowd was very orderly, and were lavish in their applause, which was bestowed liberally by both sides. I may also take this opportunity of stating, that the arrangements in connection with the management of the match were most satisfactory. The wickets were very fast, but almost as true as possible. I fancy that the Albert Ground will suit the Englishmen's style of play much better than the Melbourne Ground. The outside fielding ground was very rough, and cannot be compared with the Albert ground in that respect.

About 12.30 the first representatives of the All-England team came out, and as the "leviathan" himself and Jupp made their appearance, it was the occasion for such a demonstration of applause and cheering as I have never before witnessed on a cricket field. Here opposed, for the first time in a batsman on an Australian ground, the greatest cricketer the world has ever seen, and his reception was a fitting one. Allan and Coustick were the bowlers, and the principal positions in the field were occupied as follows:—Allan, bowler; Gibson, wicket-keeper; Coustick, short-slip; Kelly, point; Robertson, cover point; Coates, mid-on; Bishop, long-slip; Oggin and Goldsmith, long leg and mid-off; M'Gee, short leg. Allan bowled the first over, and, wonderful to relate, W. G. was nearly run out from the first ball; and judging from the manner in which the running was made for some time, neither of the batsmen seemed anxious to stay. Mr. Grace soon began knocking the bowling about in all directions, amassing a fine score in the interest of the spectators. The Eighteen were badly placed at the beginning, and they scored slowly, and were some time before they settled down into their places. At 10 o'clock 50 appeared on the board (4 about fifteen minutes, most of the runs being scored from Allan. When the score was 39 Boyle retired, and Allan at the southern wicket. Previous to this, however, Gibson made a catch at the wicket from Allan, but the umpire gave it "not out," but Gibson and others who were in a position to judge all affirmed that Grace touched the ball. Boyle's second ball was a full pitch to leg, from which Grace scored 2. The Victorian party seemed to be settled down to their work, and Jupp's patient defence, and Grace's splendid placing of the ball, were the subjects of admiration and applause. But, when the score was 49, Boyle bowled a ball to W. G., and he allowed it to pass, and was clean bowled for the first time in Australia. The ball was of ordinary pace, went rather low, and hit the middle stump. Big Boyle was certainly the hero of the day, and was deservedly admired, but he soon lost the company of Charlwood, who while he was in, but, although the public loudly cheered Boyle for his performance, I think they would like to have seen a little more of the great cricketer's prowess. (1-33-40.) Mr. Gilbert followed, and commenced with a single from Coustick. 60 up. The Eighteen now begin to settle down to their work, and to find their proper places, and from this time to the finish, the bowling and fielding could not be surpassed. When the score was 64 Jupp, having effected the required separation, was taken off, and Allan again resumed the bowling; and, after a few overs, succeeded in dismissing Jupp, who had been on the wickets upwards of an hour for his 25 runs. He has an excellent and patient defence, and quite maintained his English reputation. (2-22-34.) Greenwood (the Yorkshire representative) followed, and, after two more overs had been delivered, the usual adjournment was made for luncheon. Punctually at a quarter to 3 the game was resumed, and the bowlers appeared in rattling form, and, as they were backed up by an excellent eighteen the fielding of the scorer was very slow. After Gilbert had made 13, and shown an excellent defence and thorough cricket, he drove a ball hard back to Coustick, who stuck to it. (3-15-73.) G. F. Grace followed, but the batsman, who is reputed to be the second-best batsman in England, did not seem to be quite at home with the bowling. He commenced with a snick to leg for 1, but appeared to find the bowling and fielding of a far more superior character than he anticipated, and could be induced to nothing but big hits, and scored dissatisfied with anything less than five or 6's. After crabbing 5, he was bowled by Allan, the ball bounding from his pads, (4-5-81.) W. Gerrit (the celebrated Nottinghamshire player) stepped into the "breach," and joined Greenwood, who was exhibiting a fine defence, and was batting with great patience. In fact nothing also was probable with such bowling and fielding. Mailey was delivered by each bowler, and although the batting was excellent, yet the extra number of fields certainly produced a fast scoring. The advantages of eighteen good men in the field, was especially manifest at this period of the game. After 70 appeared on the telegraph board, Greenwood, who had stayed before 50 was put up. Green-wood was at last bowled by Allan for five runs, which he was nearly two hours in obtaining—a proof of the excellent bowling and fielding; and of the patience of the batsman. Coustick at this time had bowled 5 balls for 13 runs. R. Humphreys (Surrey) joined Garrett, who was batting magnificently. His stay was not very long one, however, for he was caught by Allan in the slips from Coustick. (6-4-97). I Lillywhite (a left-handed batsman) joined the distinguishable player, but still the bowling was "good on," and Garrett commenced that the bowling and fielding were magnificent, and said to that end the best county bowled, Lillywhite, a ball, which he played, and allowed it to roll on to his wicket. (7-4-101.) Mackintyre (who plays remarkably than thereof) followed, but he just hit Noble's delivery, who was well caught in the next over by Cooper at mid-off from Allan. He played excellent cricket, showing good defence combined with great hitting power. (8-12-101.) Noble followed, but he is evidently not a distinguished batsman, for Allan clean Bowled, him with a full which pitched at the bottom of his stumps; and Sam Coustick chuckled on the Victorian Separtet, keeping Sam company with 8. (9-0-101.) Southerton was the last man, and the finale soon arrived, whether 5 more runs had been scored (including a drive for 4 by Mackintyre) the latter was caught in the slips by Jupp off Allan. Southerton carrying out his bat. (10-9-115.) Although the last wicket was not 10, it took long hours to make the runs, and the exhibition of batting throughout was not of a brilliant character. The bowling, as I have before remarked, could not be surpassed, and was backed up by excellent fielding. Mailey was unlucky enough to get the number of times the public were "sold" by catches from bumb-balls (great-shall catches, was surprising? When will the public learn to distinguish a bumb-ball from a proper catch.

The eleven were probably not prepared to meet such bowling and fielding, and when it is remembered that two of the best bowlers on Grace and Southerton were in reserve, it will easily be seen that the eleven have no easy task before them. MT Grace himself remarked that he was prepared to find excellent bowling opposed to them, but he never expected that excellence would be maintained by two bowlers alone, during a period of four hours. He does, however, the extra mile, being well placed, made a great difference in the result. The eleven second very anxious to maintain their reputation, and when they had 32 less a score of 287, they seemed some what uneasy. When Jupp was in with W. G. he remarked that he never saw the Doctor so, and he styled him in such an excited state.

Being in a minority of 167, the Eleven had to follow their innings, and as Grace retired to reserve himself for Monday, Jupp and Allan again resuming the bowling, Coustick and Allan again resuming the bowling. At this point Greenwood made an excellent five from Allan, but in attempting the second run Macintyre was run out, the ball being well fielded and returned by Charlwood. (1-6-5.) Humphrey joined Greenwood, and brought up 10 by a good hit to leg for 4 from Coustick. Greenwood followed with another good hit for 4 from Allan. But the state of things was put a stop to by Sam Bowling Humphrey. (2-6-18.) Gilbert again came in, and Greenwood, who was batting sure-footed, out Allan for 4, and after a few more runs had been given the stumps were drawn at 6 o'clock, the total being 72, with two wickets down. At present, the Eleven have a score of 160 to make, with eight wickets to go down; in order to gain a one-innings defeat. The match almost seems a certainty for Victoria, and unless they (All England) can run up a score of 300 I do not see how defeat can be averted. Still what has been may be done again, and excellent as the bowling and fielding of the eighteen are Mr. Grace may run up one of his large scores. I hear he is sure to be ably seconded by Oscroft, Jupp, and Greenwood, and his brother. I have named in order the two whom I consider the most reliable batsmen. Southerton, Bush, and Lillywhite are strongly likely to get into double figures. It is amusing to hear the reports which are flying about in all directions, chiefly emanating from the first vessel of the kind built in the colony. The Victoria is an iron cylinder, built of ¼-inch iron plates, with a sharp bend again 10 feet long. The total length of the cylinder is 36 feet, and the diameter 7 feet 2 inches. It is fitted with a double or outer hull, which is also like an ordinary steamer, and between these an iron door, which covers what is termed an air valve, and which is supposed to represent the "conning hole" of a steam boiler. This hole is the hole to and an outlet from the interior of the vessel, and is just large enough to admit the passage of a body of a fully developed man. The cylinder has a large opening in the bottom 6 feet long by 2 feet wide, that represents the keel on a small scale the keel of a vessel, and, like a hatchway, is fitted with hatches, which can be closed to air and water tightness. It is with this hatchway that the river bottom will be worked. Internally the cylinder is filled in the after end with two immensely strong iron compartments termed air reservoirs, and capable of containing an ordinary pressure of six atmospheres or 90 lbs. in the square inch. These compartments are connected with four airpumps, which are fitted across the middle section of the vessel, and are driven by motive power supplied by water wheels with curved floats or paddles, which are fitted to the wheel-boxes above mentioned, and are to be driven by the current of the river. The two wheels are connected by a main shaft, from which both drive the counter-shaft, to which the air-pumps are attached. The arrangement is very simple, and to all appearance exceedingly effective; but the point can of course be demonstrated beyond a mere practical theory. We omitted to mention that the upper part of the cylinder is called round, and that a rudder is fitted to the after or large end; the opposed end of the cylinder is the prow. The start portion of the boat, through which the tube passes to establish communication between both ends of the vessel, is intended as a reservoir for the purpose of receiving air compressed to about 90 lbs. to the square inch, and will contain sufficient to supply three men for four hours. Independent of this, two large paddle-wheels, 8 ft. in diameter, on each side of the boat, are revolved by force of the current when submerged, and put in motion four air-pumps inside the boat, which are connected by a tube with the surface, to keep up continual supplies of fresh air. In case of accident (based I presume are also capable being worked by hand) they will supply, when in full stroke (otherwise, about ten times more air than is required for actual operations. The shaft, which is 6 feet by 3 feet, and 16-inch deep, is covered with strong cast-iron plates, securely bolted, and made thoroughly air and water tight. The floor, of cast-iron plates—which are secondly fitted in angle iron at the sides and supported in the centre—not only answers to secure the machinery, but is also used as a receptacle for ballast underneath. The rudder is supposed to be worked when submerged by means of two tiller ropes from the interior, and from the exterior by a handle which can be used from the dock. A few explanations are necessary in reference to the two paddle wheels. The upper portion of these, being covered with boxes when submerged, would be half of water, and in this position the lower part of the wheels, neutralised by water in upper part of the boxes, would not move. Hence a communication is established with the interior of the boat by means of a pipe, and the water lowered in the boxes by compressed air within six inches of the bottom, and as air is lighter than water, the wheels consequently revolve with ease. This principle, Mr. Nuttall states, has never previously been applied to any project of the kind. The shifting operation, which has not yet fitted in the interior of the boat, is supposed to be capable of washing about 10 loads per day. No washdirt will be put through the sluice boxes, which, however, will be stationed, so the boat can be moved with ease to any part of the river when under the surface, the facility will be afforded for thoroughly testing or putting the river bed. Having rods of a peculiar structure have been suggested by Mr. Nuttall as necessary to suit the nature of the ground prior to commencing the operations. One end of the cable is made fast to a crabwinch in the interior of the boat, and the other, rising from the boat is fitted with a crabwinch fitted in the tender on the surface. When found desirable to move its position, the boat is floated clear of the bottom, and pulled ahead by means of the crabwinch or lowered with the break. Mr. Nuttall has also suggested the use of an extension shaft, which could be lowered to any depth required.

A SUBMARINE BOAT.

(Extracted from the Otago Daily Times, December 15.)

THE Submarine Gold Mining Company's undertaking has attracted a very material stage—let us hope towards success. On Saturday morning the queer-looking iron vessel that has for some time been building at the end of Rattray-street, Jetty was conducted to the deep, and, contrary to the expectations of some people, not only floated, but floated right side uppermost. It was known that the launch was to take place, and great therefore was the assemblage to witness it. His Honor the Superintendent was present, as well as the Executive of the Colony. Of the many objects, animate and inanimate, to which this contraptine thing has been likened, it bore a closer resemblance to a large steam boiler fitted with paddle-boxes or wheels than to anything else; and the resemblance was rendered the more complete by the iron dome fastened on the wheel-boxes, which was as much like a steam-chest as anything but a steam-chest itself could well be. We have on former occasions informed our readers of the purpose for which it was constructed, viz., working the beds of tributaries rivers where the current is strong and the water deep, and we also stated that the principle of the vessel was not a novel one, having been introduced in France by a clever Frenchman, Dr. Pierre, some twenty years ago. The Platypus, as the vessel under notice is named, is the fact, nearly a facsimile, with improvements, of the first vessel built by that gentleman. Member Wilkins, now an Otago resident, assisted him in the work, and, being therefore well posted up in everything concerning it, was particularly benighted to provide the plans and specifications of the first vessel of the kind built in the colony. The Platypus is an iron cylinder, built of ¼-inch iron plates, with a sharp bend again 10 feet long. The total length of the cylinder is 36 feet, and the diameter 7 feet 2 inches. It is fitted with a double or outer hull, which is also like an ordinary steamer, and between these an iron door, which covers would not allow anyone to bring any water. The fire is not extinguished.

The Otago Daily Times of the 5th instant reports:—"The greatest wild and destructive bushfire of the season that has occurred at Dunedin, was experienced yesterday. Roofs and verandahs were denuded of their coverings, windows blown in, and dust found its way in houses through every opening. Fences were levelled, and trees uprooted or broken down. The dust flew about in the form of clouds, and the wind in the forenoon was so high that it was hazardous for pedestrians with a fair share of dust in their pleasant. We regret to hear that a fatal accident was caused by the gale. A labourer, whose name had not yet transpired, was employed with a man named Hills, about 4 o'clock to-day, in the afternoon, disembarking timber from the ship Queen, at the Gasworks-street jetty, when some paling came into the bay. Hills and his mate jumped into a dinghy with only one oar; and endeavoured to get there, but the boat was driven out beyond the end of the training wall, and shipped a large quantity of water. Hills took off his boots and cautioned the other man to do the same, but he took no heed, and appeared to be confused. They not almost immediately afterwards swamped, and the poor man sank. Hills by clinging to the boat, was dragged to Vauxhall, and thus saved. Some young men at Port-street, having noticed the boat in distress, put off to sea, but were unable to reach it before it capsized. The men deserved themselves to rescuing Hills, which they succeeded in doing. The police, on being informed of the accident, put off into ship's boat, and diligently dragged for hours the bay near the scene of the accident, but without success. Deceased is believed to have been a stranger in Dunedin, and was known to live at the White Horse Hotel, Stoop-street. In a pocket of his coat, which was left on the Kirkcaldy, several letters were found bearing the above name, with the name, "Mr. Beamish" on them. The police intend to renew their search to-day."

QUEENSLAND SUGARS IN EUROPE.

The courtesy of the Colonial Secretary enables us (Queensland) to present the following reports upon the value of Queensland sugars sent to the Vienna Exhibition. The reports have been forwarded by Mr. Daintree, to whom the brokers sold, in a note, that "the only suggestion we can make is that the sugar should, if possible, be of good grain, and remark that a nice yellow color is most desired."

The greatest value of these reports is in their guidance to our colonial sugar makers. Were samples of all the varieties (including samples from the "good grain" "nice yellow colour" referred to by Messrs. Anderson and Co.) on view in the Queensland Museum, or other place where the sugar makers could see them, the result would not fail to be beneficial. Without some such means for comparison the reports, however interesting, are of comparatively little practical value.

COMMERCIAL VALUE OF THE SUGAR.

1. Henry Jordan, Tiquan—Light yellow grocery, very good quality; value, 30s.

2. Raff and Co., Maryhill—Colonny dry pale sugar, rather too pale for grocery purposes; value, 31s.

3. Government Penal Establishment, St. Helena—Brown in colour and heavy in condition, having very much the appearance of being semi sugars or syrups; value, 23s. 6d.

4. Phillip H. Nind, Yabriqah—Dull yellow; barely suitable for grocries, heavy in condition; value, 22s.

5. Ramsay, Brothers, Linda Estate—Very colonny, fair grain, but moist in condition; value, 30s.

6. A. H. Brown, Antigua Plantation—Very fine dry grainy sugar, but rather too pale; value, 32s.

7. Port Royal Mill—Dull yellow, grocery, grain not sufficiently developed; value, 30s.

8. Robert Muir, Barron—Good grocery sugar, very much of the crystallized Demerara stamp; value, 32s. 6d.

9. Fryer and Strachan, Ingrahame—Fair grain, but heavy in condition; value, 28.

10. John Eaton, Eaton Vale—Colonny gray sugar with bold grain, not suitable for grocery purposes on account of its grayness; value, 30s.

11. Hon. Louis Hope, Swinton Plantation—Useful brown refining, good condition; value, 30s. 6d.

12. Mackenzie, Brothers, Saldanha—Good gray refining sugar, in excellent condition; value, 29s.

13. R. Davidson, Alexander Plantation—Good useful brown, with small grain; value, 31s. 6d.

14. J. Johnson and Sons Helmsfield—Very fair sugar but pale in colour, similar in appearance to low pieces; value, 32s. 6d.

MR. BRIGHT'S SPEECH AT BIRMINGHAM.

On Wednesday, the 22nd October, the Right Hon. John Bright, who on Saturday was re-elected without opposition—he accepting the office of Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, addressed his constituents in Bingley Hall, which was completely filled by a most enthusiastic audience. To the body of the hall, which is estimated to afford standing room for 12,000 or 13,000, the public had admission free. The platform from which Mr. Bright spoke was seated for 700. Behind this was a gallery erected for 300 ladies, while light and left were two galleries capable of accommodating 1500 persons. The following slightly abridged report is taken from the Times:—

Mr. Bright, who on rising was received with loud cheers, which were renewed again and again, said:—Mr. Mayor and gentlemen,—It is now nearly four years since I was permitted to stand face to face with my constituents, I was, as you know, withdrawn from public labour and from your service by a severe and prolonged illness. It has often regretted very much that when my health failed I did not at once return into your hands the trust that you had confided to me. (No, no.) My individual judgment was overruled by the opinion and advice of my friends. It is almost five years since I stood in this hall, and was re-elected after having accepted office in the Administration then just formed by Mr. Gladstone. I asked your sanction for the step I had taken, and you freely gave it. (Hear, hear.) Again, after the lapse of five years, I have been invited, with much hesitation and much difficulty, again to accept office in the same Administration, and I have asked you again to sanction the step I have taken, and you have freely and without contest sanctioned it. It need hardly tell you that my heart is full of thanks for this fresh manifestation of your confidence and your good opinion. (Hear, hear.). It is worth our while to observe what are the great principles that during the last five years have been adopted and fixed irrevocably in the policy and legislation of Great Britain by the consent of Parliament, and by the knowledge and assent of the country. (Cheers.) I say that these five years are memorable years, when that the Administration will live—(cheers)—and that its measures will bear comparison with those of any Government which has ever preceded it. (Loud cheers.) A few years ago it was thought an impossible thing to remove an Established Church—(a laugh)—and yet we Established Church. Disposal of the political institution only—an Established Church has been removed, while the Church remains. (Cheers.) And what does that mean? It means that the property of that political institution has been, to a large extent, appropriated by the State; it means that a number of Bishops have been removed from the House of Lords—(cheers)—and we have lived to be convinced, such of us as were not convinced before, that a Church may exist and religion may prosper without the support of the State. (Loud cheers.) At this moment, we are in Ireland a Protestant, episcopal, Church in perfectly good health, and accepting honestly its free gifts from certain sects, and things superstitious, which, it faced, it had been rid of three hundred years ago. (Hear, hear.) But we have established another principle during these years, with regard to national aid to the churches, especially or exclusively of landed property. I am as much for fair dealing with rich people as with poor men. (Hear, hear.) I think something good has been done when Parliament has shown that the rights, and interests, and homes of the people are as sacred as certain obsolete rights of property that have been assumed to vest in the landlord. As far as I can understand, in regard to Ireland, there is no diminution of rent; there is no insecurity for the payment. No class in that country can be shown to have suffered by the great measure which passed in the year 1869. (Cheers.) Another great principle has been established—that office, authority, dignity, in a great service of the State which spends twenty-eight millions a year, shall not henceforth be bought by the rich to the exclusion of those who are not rich, or are poor, and promotion in the army is no longer to be obtained either by the purse and I will say the corrupt favour. (Cheers.) The corruption market is closed for ever in that department of the public service. (Cheers.) Unfortunately there is still a purchase of office of the highest character in another branch of the Church established. (Hear, hear.) I was glad to see, a few days ago, that a Bishop, very noble to my mind, condemned this, and I think described it as a scandalous thing. I say that it is offensive in any branch of a Christian Church. (Hear, hear.) It stands only in the Established Church in England. I trust the time will come when the members of that Church will regard it to the disgrace it is regarded, I believe, by all persons outside and unconnected with that Church. (Cheers.) There is another principle that has been established which must increase many hearts, and that is that the franchise is the right of the people, and that the landlord, the employer, and the capitalist have no right to ask a man to give his vote against the opinion and the conscience of the voter. I was told lately that the Conservative editors—(a laugh)—spoke it chiefly to-night of the ballot when they were talking to me, but that, when they left all election, they turned round it." (Cheers and laughter) "But whether we have elections or not there, I am for the ballot—(loud cheers)—and I expect that the longer it remains a part of our election system the more possible it will be for the electors to vote there things which are coming to the front? We must be thankful for what we have, and we must be sure that it cannot be taken from us. We have not finished yet, and we shall be disappointed if we do not vote a few years ago. It was obvious, when the borough franchise was brought before us, that the county franchise could not long remain as it is. It was ridiculous, it was absurd, it was a thing which could not be permanently maintained. Where it was. Well, that is a question which every day becoming nearer. How near it is I cannot say, but it is a question that is intimately connected with another not less important, and that is the redistribution of political power. Now, let me ask you whether you think that the Conservative Party would have the hardihood to offer a bill and the arrangement of the future which would determine, if Parliament should sanction it, the number of members to be given, for instance, to the metropolis, to Birmingham, Manchester, Glasgow, and all great towns in the United Kingdom? (No, no.) I would rather leave it in the hands of men who have a sympathy with the true and honest representatives of the country. I object to the Opposition coming to deal with a matter of this kind. (Laughter.) There is another question, to which Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Wright, I believe, referred to, the question of the land. You know what has happened since, by great efforts we were enabled to free the portions of land. (Cheers.) I know it was the opinion of my dear friend Cobden—(renewed cheers)—that the freedom of the land would be a great boon to the country, as was the freedom of the produce of the soil. It is a question of the intensest interest to the working classes. I am delighted—as I hope thousands and thousands who have no immediate connection with the land are—to be lighted to see some movement and stir amongst the class of agricultural labourers. (Loud cheers.) But bear in mind that it is not in the power of organization, especially of a scattered class as they are, permanently and greatly to raise the rate of wages. When the agricultural class in this country realizes it, that the land shall be made abundantly free; that there should be steps by which the best, the cleverest, the most industrious, the most frugal of the agricultural labourers should gradually make their way to a better and a higher social level. (Cheers.) This can never be with land laws such as we have—land laws which extend everywhere to great estates and great farms altogether beyond the reach of the capacities of the class of the agricultural labourer. That is a question which will have to be dealt with very soon. Last Session a bill was introduced by the present Lord Chancellor with a view to making more easy and more cheap the transfer of land—of course, I mean by pure purchase. Other bills must be introduced before long on the subject. It cannot sleep, and it is as necessary for the landowners themselves that it should be dealt with as it is for the agricultural labourers in their poor and abject condition. (Cheers.) There are other laws which affect land—the laws of landlord and tenant, and the question of the preservation of game. That is a matter which will have to be dealt with, and with some degree of force before long. (Cheers.) It seems to be a monstrous thing that farmers should occupy land, paying a rent for it, and that they should not have absolute property in all that they upon the soil. (Loud cheers.) There are two or three other questions which I must just refer to, which have been called moderation. I am not prepared to say that I have merit would consent, or ought to consent, with regard at least to two of the measures, to do everything that has been suggested; but I am of opinion that with regard to all these of them, concession or alteration may be made which would be just to all other classes of the community, and will be satisfactory to a reasonable and thoughtful mind among the working classes. (Loud cheers.) Now I come to the question of expenditure. The public, I am sorry to say, during prosperous years have been so much attending to their own personal expenditure, which has greatly increased—(a laugh)—that they seem to be oblivious of the expenditure of the Administration. But the question of expenditure is a very serious one. I have heard in the House of Commons, from the leader of the Opposition and from the leader of the Administration, condemnation in the strongest language of the extravagant expenditure of the years—and applies those rates partly in the support of Catholic schools, and very much more in the support of Church of England schools, over which the ratepayers have no kind of control whatever. That, I think, is an evil principle, and one that should not be continued. (Loud cheers.) But I am bound to say that I do not think the charge, as left in the bill, was supposed capable of exciting the disprobation which has arisen on account of it. For myself, I have not publicly in any public meeting discussed the subject since it has come before the nation; but I will say what I think with regard to the question of education through the sects. I believe that it is not possible ever to establish a truly national or truly right, (Cheers.) The fact is that the public do not take a great interest in Dissenting schools. The Church cares nothing for Dissent; and with regard to the question, Dissent cares but little for the Church. (Cheers and laughter.) The people regard the schools as Church schools and chapel schools; they do not regard them as public and national schools, and as supporting a great system, in which the whole people unite for a great and national object. Then again, with regard to the School Boards. The mode of election appears to me about the worst for purposes of general education, national education that could possibly have been devised. When a contest comes for a school board, the real question of education seems hardly ever thought of; it is a squabble between Church and Chapel and Sectarian, and I do not know how many besides. (Cheers and laughter.) When the school board meets, there are the priest, the parson, and the minister, and their partisans. But there is no free breeze of public opinion passing through them. It is rather an unwholesome atmosphere of what I would call sectarian exaltedness, and sometimes of bigotry, in which nothing can thrive. (Cheers.) Now with regard to the one two points which have been much discussed, particularly that point of the 25th clause. (Cheers.) Whatever is said about it in the country, I believe that there are many worthy and honourable men on the opposite side of the House to that on which I sit who would be very glad to have some arrangement come to with regard to that clause; because, as long as this remains a matter of dispute, it is obvious that whatever good can be got out of what I call an inefficient measure, and therefore one not calculated to yield much good, will be checked. I believe there is a mode, and a simple and a just mode, by which everything may be done, fairly both to nobody, that is now proposed to be done under the 25th clause, and that clause might be repealed. (Laughter.) Now, in speaking of the five years I have said nothing of the minor measures, and I will say nothing of them. I have said nothing about treasonous tendencies, and I have not touched yet upon the question which I think ought not to be passed over, and that is the course of the Government in the settlement of the dispute with the United States. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Chamberlain, I think, referred to a speech made the other day by an eminent member of the House of Lords—(laughter)—in which he (the noble Marquis) insisted that the Government, which turned one cheek meekly to the United States and another meekly to Spain, had only held front for a savage African nation. With regard to the savage African nation, I will undertake to say that there are not three men, not even statesmen to avoid war with the African nation, or who will be more disposed by all possible and reasonable pacific measures to adjust the troubles which have arisen on that continent than her Majesty's Ministers. (Loud cheers.) The time will come—and I trust before long—when Parliament, setting on the opinion of each of its own committees, will consider that it will behoove to withdraw absolutely from that coast. (Hear, hear.) There is no slave trade there to put an end to now. Trade flourishes better where there are no forts than where they have to be fended. The country I am speaking of is one in which English life is scarcely to be maintained, and I believe the interest and the honour of Great Britain, at some not distant period will be best consulted by a withdrawal from that coast. (Cheers.) But as to Ashantee, they talk of this treaty of 1872 as if it were a great fulfillment of a great hope. It was a very inglorious failure; and I do not see in it the prospect of a prospectus. He was what they call the promoter of a great company, which was to have great capital, and a great numbered shares, and great profits. All this was to work a great invention—everything was great about it, but what it was was a great secret; indeed it was so profound a secret that until all the money was paid in nobody was to know what it was. (Laughter.) Now that is the Conservative policy at this moment. (Laughter.) They have a policy, which they offer for the coming election, but it is a profound secret. When you have all given your votes and returned a Conservative majority, perhaps they will tell you what it is. (Laughter and cheers.) I mentioned 40 years. Lord Beaconsfield referred to that 40 years in his speech. It is a difficult matter for one of our Conservative friends to get over such 40 years as we have had in this country and during the whole of that time the Liberal party has been in power, for when it was not in office it was in power. (Cheers.) Sir Robert Peel was Minister in the year 1841, and left office in the year 1846, and the revenue, the revenue which we pay his memory, all that which his family now hold dear, he purchased by wisely doing that which the Anti-Corn Law League for so many years had advocated. (Cheers.) Therefore, when the Earl of Derby and Mr. Disraeli were in office, what did they do but pass the very measure which you and I had disposed over and over again in your Town Hall? ("Hear, hear!" and cheers.) Therefore, as regards the forty years that the Liberal party have been in power, and have ruled in this country, I am entitled to claim for them the merit and glory of the administration and legislation of that remarkable period. The changes have been great, I admit, but the improvements have been as great as the changes. Look what a growth of content there has been throughout this country; look what a growth of peace there has been, and of national prosperity and comfort among every class. If I could take all the men here with grey heads, or all the men who have passed over sixty years of age—and they are not a few—and were to ask them to tell us what was the state of things when they were twenty or thirty years old, they would be able to show that this country has gone through a beneficent revolution in regard to the condition of the great body of the working classes. I believe all that has come from the long period of peace and the changes that have been made in the legislation of the country by the Liberal party. I will tell you a little anecdote about this, and one which I think will interest you. I have been reading lately a great number of letters which were addressed to my dear friend Mr. Cobden during our long friendship, and I have read also a several interesting memoranda narrating what took place in Paris, when he was there negotiating the Commercial Treaty with France. He had to go to Napoleon to induce the Emperor Napoleon to follow the example of this country with regard to the abolition of import duties, and the establishment of something like freedom of trade. He told the Emperor that great Conservative leader, the chief of the party of Sir Robert Peel, and how great was the regard and reverence felt for Sir Robert Peel. The Emperor said that he should be charmed and flattered if he could think it possible that he could do things of that kind so good for his country. "But," he added, "I am a despot, and I rule in France. Your Queen may make reforms, in France we make revolutions." Now, observe, the Emperor was a man who had lived in this country for years; he had watched the working of our free opinion and of our institutions from the retirement of his exile, and afterwards for nearly twenty years on the throne; he had seen the lofty scope of the Queen's throne; and that was his judgment; that was the statesmanlike conclusion. (Cheers.) Those who are in error—who tell you that nothing has been done, and that we have not the right to be done—those men are no less in error who tell you that what has been done is well, and that it is evidence to say more! What you should do is to sit down in thankfulness and the next five years, steadily returning in favour of questions which the public have thoroughly discussed, which is thoroughly convinced, and which Parliament can honestly and conscientiously put into law. (Cheers.) For my part, looking back over these forty years, I feel some little sense of content. But it does not in the least degree lessen on the contrary, it rather adds to and strengthens my hope for the future. (Cheers.) The history of the last forty years of this country, judged fairly—I speak of it legislation—is mainly a history of the conquests of freedom. It will be a grand volume that will tale the story, and year same and since, if I mistake not, will be found in some of its pages. For me, the finest chapter is now writing. It may be already written—(cries of "No, no")—but for you, this great commencement, you have a perpetual youth and a perpetual future. I pray Heaven that in the years to come, and when my voice is hushed, you may be granted strength, and moderation, and wisdom to influence the councils of your country, and to guide them, for ever other than noble and religious means, for none other than noble and righteous ends. (Loud cheers; in the midst of which the right hon. and gentleman bowed his acknowledgments and spoken for an hour and ten minutes.)

Mr. Bright's speech was received throughout with the utmost enthusiasm, though at the remote end of the hall it must have been difficult, if not impossible, to hear him. The right hon. gentleman, who seemed in fuller health than when he last appeared in Parliament, spoke with great deliberation, and occasionally with considerable effect, saying that he was still far from physically unwell. At times, however, his oratory was as vigorous as of old, and every point delivered with his accustomed energy and a perfect storm of applause. The meeting broke up with three cheers for the speaker, which were given with an amount of energy which fairly made the building ring again.

THE GOOD TEMPLARS—WHO AND WHAT THEY ARE.

Anything which sinks the individual will sooner or later sink the nation, while that which stimulates the man will tend of necessity to elevate the nation. It is the philanthropist, not the politician, and the Christian the appeal is addressed, help to destroy that which has so long proved to be the source of untold sorrow to thousands; and if it cannot be accomplished by any other means than sooner or later it must be secured by making a distinct political party, the success of which will prove the way for the safety, security, and stability of all that is great, glorious, and free. Not only is it required of those who join the order that they should adopt these principles, but it is also needful that every candidate should believe in the existence of Almighty God as the ruler and governor of all things. That which is the order is not committed to any special form of doctrinal belief or church polity it has as a distinct and fundamental part of its constitution the recognition of the one great Ruler whose laws all are bound to obey, it is also part of the general method of conducting the meetings of its members to require that a Bible shall lie open, emblematic of the truth that all things are to be conducted in the spirit which springs from the teachings of that sacred volume. It is, perhaps, give a clear idea of the method by which the machinery is arranged for carrying out the work of the order if we start with the formation of a lodge. To do this ten or more persons over sixteen years of age are required to make application for what is called a charter. If in the judgment of the Grand Lodge officers, of whom we shall have more to say presently, it is deemed advisable to grant permission, a properly qualified officer is instructed to visit the locality, and institute the lodge. All persons who wish to become members must not only be willing to answer the questions already named, but to promise to observe the laws and regulations of the order, such laws not conflicting with their duty either as Christians or citizens. These laws are sold to any one who will buy them before joining, and a copy is given to every new member. Each person also is required to pay not less than 1s. 6d. on the night of admission, and afterwards at the rate of 1s. per quarter, or more and 6d. per quarter for females. It is by this arrangement that each of its members that the name of independent is maintained, inasmuch as by the rules no lodge can receive subsidies from outside, or be supported by those who do nothing to the order. In this way lodges all over the country are able to secure funds sufficient to meet their working expenses without begging from door to door. Perhaps it may be asked, how is the payment of these dues secured? By a very simple, yet certain, process which accomplishes two things at the same time. It is this: To gain admission into a lodge room, every member is instructed how to rap at the door, and on its being opened he is required to give what is called the password, in a whisper, to the guard who has charge of the entrance. This password will not only admit him to his own lodge, but to any other lodge in the world; but to possess it—a child it is changed quarterly, and is only given by the presiding officer in a whisper, together with the amount of subscription, and no member is allowed to receive it until the quarterly subscription is first paid. It will thus be seen that the working of the order is purely self-supporting, self-paying, self-taxing, and then the spirit of brotherhood always provides for the emergency. Out of those quarterly subscriptions every lodge has to send to head-quarters, or per member as a capitation tax for carrying on the work. Half of this, however, goes back to the lodge from which it is paid, and other purposes. Each lodge, therefore, has perfect control of nearly the whole of its funds, and spends them in such ways as are found to be most effective for carrying the work of its own locality. Another feature worth noting is this: Every member is required, if possible, to attend the lodge meeting, which takes place once a week in some suitable room. Should a member be absent three consecutive nights, a special committee is appointed to look after him and ascertain the reason. By this means backsliders are reclaimed and the careless kept from going astray. In the event of sickness the members are expected to take it in turn, if required, to attend to the wants of the patient. It should, however, be remarked that no special arrangements are made for the care of sick or aged, but provided for by Rechabite Tent, Sons of Temperance, and other societies. Again it is provided that each lodge shall be governed by distinct officers who go out of office at the end of the quarter. Most of these are elected by ballot, and in this way a constant succession of new officers is secured, independent of which a place is found for all who are willing to work; one thing, however, in this is especially to be noted, and it is this—ladies are as eligible for office as gentlemen, and it is noticeworthy that to find some of the most active and industrious workers among the fair sex. This is a fact important principally when we reflect upon the vast and rapid spread of intemperance of late years among the female portion of the community. It is not only husbands, wives and daughters can gather together once a week with those who are best upon doing good, and so learn to be more in deed day and goodness. It is sometimes imagined that the good templars constitute a secret society, but this is a mistake; they mean no secrecy of their object; they publish a memorandum twice each week, besides holding meetings all over the country, but when they meet together as lodge or a family, they simply do what other bodies or families do, viz., require of those who wish to join them some guarantee that they are entitled to the privilege. This is accomplished not only by means of the passwords and rap, but also by certain signs by which the members are enabled to recognize one another in any part of the world. This becomes a safeguard to the young and inexperienced when they leave home, and at once introduces the emigrant of the youth into a circle of safety which circumstances compel them to leave the home of their childhood. In a thousand ways it is found to be a help to protect the weak from falling, and to lift the unfortunate in the hour of peril. As soon as the lodge reaches the number of 100 or 150, it is generally found advisable to secure, and open another place to meet on another night, and so on. The lodge increases in number, provision is made, by which they are formed into what are called district lodges; these meet quarterly, and represent generally some well defined Parliamentary boundary. Already over fifty of these have been formed in England. The district lodges send subordinate lodge representatives, who are elected for the purpose, and represent, upon it, all the lodges in those districts. Again, representatives from these lodges are elected to form the Grand Lodge. This meets annually, and may be called House of Commons, Legislature, or Judicial Court, as the case may be. These district lodges are elected representatives to the Grand Lodge. This meets annually, and may be called House of Commons, Legislature, or Judicial Court, as the case may be are heard, and at which the principal officers have to be elected. At the last sitting, held at Sunderland, the Grand Lodge of England, recently held in Temperance Hall, Sunderland, 400 delegates were present, representing 400 districts, nearly 400 lodges, and the total membership of the order in England, Scotland, Wales, Canada, Victoria, India, Tasmania, Sandwich Isles, New Zealand, Australia, Gibraltar, Malta, Ireland, and Nova Scotia, 600,000. The Grand Lodge, the right worthy Grand Lodge of England, is composed of 1400 members, the Grand Lodge meets in London, and was largely attended by Members, who came several thousand miles to confer with one another as to the best mode of carrying the work of the order forward. The fee which the Grand Lodge exacts from every lodge under its jurisdiction, is only 1s. per member, and it is upon this income that the whole work of the order is carried on. The Grand Lodge of England has paid out of this income, and the establishment of some thing like freedom of trade. He told the Emperor that great Conservative leader, the chief of the party of Sir Robert Peel, and how great was the regard and reverence felt for Sir Robert Peel. The Emperor said that he should be charmed and flattered if he could think it possible that he could do things of that kind so good for his country. Per Mangorama.—By the Macedon (s.), this day, at 5 p.m.

Per Hawarden.—By the Lady Young (s.), this day, at 4 p.m.

The Alexandra (s.) cleared Port Phillip Heads at 8.30 p.m. on the 29th ultimo, rounded Wilson's Promontory at 4 a.m. on the 30th, Cape Howe at 10.45 p.m. on the same day, and entered Port Jackson Heads at 7a.m. on the 1st instant. Experienced moderate to fresh southerly winds and fine weather to Cape Howe, and light south-easterly winds and cloudy weather from thence to Port Jackson.

The Lady Young (s.) sails to-day for Brisbane, and will take passengers and horses for transhipment to the steamer Boomerang, which is announced to leave Brisbane for the Endeavour River on the 7th instant.

The Hesiers and Australian mail steamer Sun Fox, for Singapore, via Brisbane, cleared the Heads at 4.45 p.m. yesterday.

The advent of the new year was duly inaugurated by the shipping in harbour. Immediately on the bells announcing the midnight hour a general display of fireworks and blue lights took place. The most conspicuous was the ship Parramatta, from which rocketers a blockight was established, and rockets discharged; and the other vessels around the Circular Quay to the display of lights gave to our harbour a festival but very poorly equal.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 2, 1874.

PARLIAMENT is the supreme tribunal of the country, and the Assembly is the more potent of the two Houses of Parliament—ergo the House of Assembly ought to have its own way in everything. This is substantially the argument urged by some hon. members in the debate on the Robbs case. The old maxim that the King can do no wrong seems by them transmuted into the form that the Assembly can do no wrong; but with this difference—that, while the mistakes of the King were always chargeable on his advisers, and both punishable and rectifiable, the mistakes of the Assembly are made by itself and are without recourse. The GOVERNOR has found fault with the action of the Assembly, and the Cabinet has endorsed the criticism; therefrom hon. members spring indignantly to their feet, and declare that the Constitution is in danger—that the House has been insulted, and its privileges invaded. It is easy for men to get angry, especially when they have an object in getting up a breeze. But is it a fact that the Assembly has suffered any wrong? Its constitutional privileges are quite as important to the people as to itself, because the power and the independence of the chief House of Legislature are essential to adequate legislation. But on the other hand it is also of great importance to the people that the Assembly should not attempt to exceed its legitimate rights, or aim at an unchecked despotism which might be fatal to personal liberty. The representatives of the people are elected to a high and responsible position, and are set to do the most importantly work with which ordinary citizens can be entrusted; and the people who thus appoint them would cheerfully uphold them in the execution of their duty. But the people will not allow their own servants to constitute themselves into tyrants, or to abuse their judicial power by a denial of justice. The most instructive chapters in English constitutional history relate to the efforts to curb the despotism of the Crown. That power no longer threatens the liberty of the subject, but that liberty will be equally in danger if the despotism of a parliamentary majority is substituted for that of a single arbitrary will. In fact the despotism of a single man is far less dangerous, and far simpler easily neutralised.

When Parliament passes a law it has a right to expect that the people will obey them, and, the people in their turn have equally a right to expect that Parliament will obey them too. Because it makes the laws and can unmake them, it is not therefore above the laws. Whenever it delegates a certain power, it is bound to respect that delegation until it is withdrawn. All the criminal and civil jurisdiction of the country, for instance, is transferred to the Supreme and minor Courts, and no one proposes to try causes in the Assembly concurrently with their being tried in those Courts. The Volunteer Act rests precisely on the same authority as the Supreme Court Act, and the provisions of the one are no more to be ignored than the provisions of the other. If the mode provided for the trial of military offences is not satisfactory, that is a very good reason for making an alteration. But while the law remains as it is, the Assembly has no more right to treat it as inefficient, and supersede it by its own direct action, than it has to deal with a civil or criminal suit on the ground that there was undue delay in the Supreme Court, or that the Judges were likely to be partial and biassed.

We leave aside for the present for separate discussion the question as to the nature of the inquiry the Assembly instituted, and as to the mode in which it was conducted; but when the report was presented to the GOVERNOR, he was not only at liberty, but he was called upon to sit in judgment not only on Captain Rossi, but on the mode in which he had been tried. He was asked as Commander-in-chief to punish by dismissal a gentleman who had been nearly five years in the service. He would have been singularly wanting in his duty if he had obeyed this direction without looking into the merits of the case. By the Volunteer Act the GOVERNOR is virtually made the head of the military department, and it is part of his function in that capacity to preserve the purity and efficiency of military discipline, and to shield any member of the service from any form of tyranny. The minute drawn up by Sir Hercules Robinson bears evidence that he has sought to perform this duty thoroughly and conscientiously. His views are put clearly and strongly, though there is one passage conveying an imputation of motives on the part of the ex-Minister of Captain Rossi which perhaps would have been better omitted. As the GOVERNOR had no alternative but either to do or not to do as the Assembly wished him, he was compelled, if he decided not to do it, to give his reasons. The memorandum in which those reasons are set forth at large was addressed exclusively to the Cabinet, and must be read as a confidential document, the only direct communication to the Assembly being the comparatively brief message. There was nothing unconstitutional in the GOVERNOR forming an opinion which he was virtually asked to form, or in exercising a discretion which he was virtually asked to exercise. In all this there was no invasion of the privileges of the Assembly. The Assembly had set him in motion by referring the matter to him.

The Cabinet, having the GOVERNOR's memorandum submitted to it, was compelled to take it into consideration and form an opinion on it one way or the other. If it had differed from the GOVERNOR, it would have had to contest the point with him; and had the difficulty proved insuperable, or been deemed of sufficient importance, the result might have been a resignation. But the Cabinet was also at liberty to think with the GOVERNOR, and in this particular case, having opposed the adoption of the report, it was not unlikely to do so. It was no invasion of the privileges of the House for the Ministry to oppose the adoption of the report; nor was it any more to approve of the GOVERNOR's not acting upon it. The Cabinet has its discretion, and the GOVERNOR has his. Each of these powers has its recognised status in the Constitution, and its responsibility. The Assembly can, if it pleases, vote the Cabinet wrong, and an appeal will then lie to the people to decide the question between them; and the GOVERNOR is directly responsible to her MAJESTY, by whom he can be censured or dismissed if his acts are disapproved. Neither Cabinet nor Governor is absolutely bound to obey the behests of the Assembly; it is at their peril to refuse if they do so improperly, but they are at all times the judges of that peril, and can face it in the exercise of their discretion whenever they think proper. To set up the doctrine that it is lawful for either Cabinet or Governor to say "no" to the Assembly is altogether to revolutionize the Constitution, and to remove those checks and balances which have been carefully inserted.

The really important issue involved in this controversy is the liberty of the subject, and this must not be lost sight of under the mistaken notion that it is only the privileges of Parliament that are involved. Has the Assembly a right to order the infliction of a penalty on any subject, and to have its behests carried into effect without let or hindrance without any inquiry as to the justice of its verdict or as to the fairness of its investigation? What if Captain Rossi's case to-day may be any one else's to-morrow. The way for every elector to decide the question is to ask how he would like, if he happened to be unpopular, to be tried and condemned in the same way.

It has been observed by an authority on Economic Philosophy that "taxes have a tendency to remain with those on whom they are primarily imposed." The truth of this proposition has been experienced in most old States, and is now felt with considerable acuteness in England. Everybody is so unwilling to bear taxation that even when a mistake or an injustice is discovered in the incidence of it on any particular class of the people, it is extremely difficult to get the matter righted. Mr. GLADSTONE, and economists before him, have endeavoured to get the burden of taxation shifted from the labouring population to those above them, and have found the attempt ong that has required all their strength and patience. And those who are now striving to bring about an equalisation of local taxation are conscious of an opposition most difficult to overcome. It is by no means uncommon to find persons refusing to readjust what appears to be oppressive, on the ground that more injustice may be done in the attempt to unsettle what is settled; a variety of affairs having been arranged on the basis of a certain understanding, any disturbance of that understanding will be attended with inconvenience and loss to most of the parties concerned. Thus, although a disciplined mind may be of opinion that personal property should be taxed equally with real, he may incline to letting things be as they are, since real property, having borne the burden hitherto, and having in many cases been bought subject to this burden, it would continue to be the basis of local taxation.

Before that appearance of Mr. GOSCHEN's report concerning the local taxation of the United Kingdom in 1868, very little intelligence was shown respecting the subject. Indeed, very few pretended to understand it. They paid their taxes with much grumbling, under the sense of their being much in excess of what they should be, and unfairly apportioned, but abstained from any attempt to find out where the wrong really was. Since the appearance of that report, however, the public mind has been thoroughly aroused to the necessity of a readjustment of local burdens, and the Chambers of Agriculture are agitating the question vigorously to bring about the change desired, or something approaching it.

The arguments adduced by these bodies may be summarised without much danger of misrepresenting them. "In the first place, the advocates of readjustment contend that some plan should be devised to secure an equitable incidence of local taxation between real estate and personalty, so as to relieve the present excessive charge upon industry. Mr. J. J. COLMAN, member of Parliament for the city of Norwich, in treating this topic before the Economic Section of the Social Science Association at its recent meeting, made no objection to the supposition that the towns and cities should bear the greatest share of the burden since they possessed the greatest wealth, or, as it would have been demonstrated in Elizabeth's time, ability to pay; but he maintained that the test of this ability should not be rental. Now it is rental, and he very justly objected on the ground that the pressure was severest upon industry. Local taxation being levied upon rental, it follows that the whole burden of it falls on the property, which is estimated at from one-third to one-seventh of the total income of the nation, and this he considers to be unfair. The struggling tradesman, to whom large business premises may be a necessity, has to pay heavily, while a professional man or capitalist, whose office or business occupation may be comparatively small, pays a proportionately small amount, although he earns a large income; and a man who has realised a fortune, which is invested in personal estate, escapes with a fractional payment, because his requirements are limited to a private residence. This is evidently unfair, when we come to consider that the one who pays least is really more interested in some of the objects for which taxation is levied. For instance, he may have valuables in his house demanding more the attention of the police than the stock-in-trade of the tradesman, and yet his quota to the police rate may be appreciably smaller. Mr. COLMAN introduces some illustrations to show how unfair this foundation for rating is. "A," he says, "is a tradesman occupying a shop and premises at £250 per annum, but in addition to this rent the local taxgatherer requires another £70 or £80. B is his customer, but he happens to be a private gentleman, and occupies a house of £250 per annum. His net income is perhaps just the same as that of the tradesman, but he pays simply on his £80 rental, or one-fifth of A's amount. C. we will call a stockbroker or capitalist, and if he have a sufficient business to require offices of £80 per annum, you may assume that he has an income vastly in excess of the tradesman rated at £250. D. is a banker, and if the rateable value of his premises be £500 per annum, you may be sure his is a large business and a profitable one. F. is a manufacturer, requiring large factories and heavy motive power, or machinery fixed to the freehold; if so, the local authorities do not forget him, and he has to pay possibly four or five times as much as the banker." &c.

In the second place it is said "that there should be an enlargement of the area of urban Unions," which relates to taxation in support of the poor, and means that the towns in which are the Unions are apt to find themselves charged with burdens that should be spread over a wider surface. Seeing that the poor-rate in some towns is 4s. 6d. in the pound, this is a matter of some consequence.

In the third place it is contended "that the national exchequer should be made largely if not wholly responsible for the support of the permanent poor and pauper lunatics; the maintenance of the police and administration of justice; the vaccination and registration charges; and for the expenditure under the Education Act. These burdens are placed in this category on the ground of its being "unfair to make a local charge of an outlay which is necessitated by no clearly definable local circumstances, and for which the whole nation is as responsible as for any other branch of national expenditure." To single out real property to bear the burden of the police is manifestly unfair, since houses and land incite fewer people to become dishonest than personalty.

It is maintained in the fourth place, "that the administration of local affairs should be left to local authorities, maintaining the well-established principle that taxation and representation should go hand in hand;" and fifthly, that the interference of a central authority should be permitted only to prevent local authorities from doing or permitting anything injurious to the neighbourhood, it having been found that Imperial authority has sometimes forced local bodies into useless expenditure.

This question will come before the Parliaments of the ensuing session for settlement, and we shall see whether the local tax collector will be allowed, like the Imperial tax collector, to levy his rate on all sorts of wealth, instead of being confined to one sort.

Sent to the colonies: South Australia, 13; Victoria, 44; New South Wales, 23; Queensland, 3; Tasmania, 1; New Zealand, 7; West Australia, 1; total, 91. Total number of messages, 149.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT TO TWO LADS.—On Monday last (says the Bathurst Times), some excitement was caused in town by the circulation of a report to the effect that two boys (named Haines and Harrison) had been killed near Locke's platform while riding a race. It was discovered, however, during the day that the report was not true, and that the two lads, although seriously injured, were not beyond recovery. It appears that the youths had mounted two horses belonging to Mr. E. Locke, at Dirty Swamp, for the purpose of exercising them in a trial gallop, and after having started had both been thrown, either by one knee running into the other, or by some other mishap. As the horses did not appear in sight within a reasonable time after leaving the starting post, some of those who had seen the mishap thought it would be a course to ascertain what was the matter, when they found the boys in an unconscious state, each one of them (Harrison) much injured. The injuries sustained by Harrison were concussion of the brain, fracture of the right collar bone, right shoulder and one of the ribs, while Haines was badly bruised and seriously injured.

FATAL STABBING CASE.—From the Gulgong Guardian we learn that—Ah Chung was charged at the Police Court on Tuesday, 23rd December, with stabbing, with intent to murder, and Ah Young, charged with aiding and abetting in the same. Constable Keane sworn, says:—About a quarter-past 9 I was on duty at the corner of Herbert and Main streets; a Chinaman named Ah Nee came to me in a very excited manner and said a country man of his had been stabbed; I went to a residence occupied by Chinese, next to the Horse and Jockey Hotel, occupied by a Chinaman named Ah Poot; I observed a Chinaman, lying partly on the doorway with a cut on the left side; Ah Chung was brought out to me as the man who did it; I arrested him and in reply to the charge he said, "I did it;" I brought him to the lock-up. Detective Hannan, sworn, says:—Last evening, about a quarter-past 8, I was standing at the corner of Main-street, when a Chinaman came and gave me some information, in consequence of which I proceeded to a gambling-house, kept by Ah Moy; a man named Ah Nee, from whom I got the info, said in prisoner's presence "this is the man that stabbed him; I saw him do it, and I took the knife from him;" prisoner said nothing. Senior-sergeant O'Donnell, sworn, said: About a quarter-past 9 last night I saw a crowd running; I followed till I came to a house near the Horse and Jockey; I saw a man lying on the doorway of the store; he was bleeding from a wound in his side; prisoner Ah Chung was in handcuffs; and I received information that there were two other Chinese connected with the attempted murder; I was taken to another store and found Ah Young, who was pointed out to me by the Chinaman who accompanied; he resisted and we had to force him along; I arrested him on a charge of aiding and abetting Ah Chung in the attempted murder of Charley Ah Chung; I asked the wounded man, "Did this man stab you?" and he said "No, he told the other man to take the knife and stab me;" he opened his eyes and looked at prisoner, when he said that I handcuffed prisoner and sent him to the lock-up.—The Court adjourned for one hour to take down the evidence of the Chinaman who had been stabbed.—The Police Magistrate, Clerk of Petty Sessions, police, and prisoners went to where the wounded man was lying, but he was too far gone to speak, consequently his evidence could not be taken. The man Chung died on Tuesday, and an inquest was held, when the prisoners were committed by the Coroner to take their trial at the next Circuit Court.

CHAMBER BUSINESS OF THE SUPREME COURT, AND THE PRESS.—We take the following from the Hobart Town Mercury of the 23rd ultimo:—An important decision as affecting the privileges of the Press, was given yesterday by his Honor Sir Valentine Fleming, the Acting Chief Justice. An application was made to his Honor in Chambers by the defendants in the matter of The Attorney-General v. The publisher of the Examiner, to have the venue changed, the defendants alleging, and supporting the allegation by depositions, that they would not have a fair trial in Hobart Town. At the appointed hour our reporter waited on his Honor's Associate (Mr. Brown) and asked permission to attend the hearing in Chambers in his professional capacity. Mr. Brown expressed some doubt as to whether such permission could be given, it having been decided by the Judges in England that proceedings at Chambers should not be reported. He, however, consented to consult the Chief Justice on the point. A few minutes later Mr. Brown returned with a message from the Chief Justice intimating that he would be happy to receive the gentleman of the Press. Accordingly they waited upon his Honor, who remarked that personally he had not the slightest objection, nor did he think the professional gentleman engaged in the case had any objection to reporters attending and reporting the proceedings; but it had been ruled in England that Chamber proceedings were not to be reported, and as it was desirable at all times to assimilate the practice of the Supreme Court of Tasmania with that of the superior courts at home, he was reluctantly obliged to adopt the course pursued in England, on the present occasion. His friend, Mr. Justice Dobson, who held the same opinion as he (the Chief Justice) did on the subject, had placed in his hand an extract from a London newspaper of a very recent date, which he would read. It was as follows:—"On Saturday last the question as to the admission of reporters to the Judges' Chambers was decided by Mr. Justice Honeyman. Some time since Mr. Justice Dobson, who held the same opinion as he (the Chief Justice) did on the subject, had placed in his hand an extract from a London newspaper of a very recent date, which he would read. It was as follows:—"On Saturday last the question as to the admission of reporters to the Judges' Chambers was decided by Mr. Justice Honeyman. Some time since Mr. Justice Grove mentioned that the judges had met and expressed an opinion that the proceedings at Chambers should not be reported without permission, and the matter rested until the present occasion, when a decision was given as to the case of an infant who was brought up on a writ of habeas corpus. The solicitors on both sides expressed their willingness that the case should appear in the newspapers, as the matter was of some importance, and an application was made that the matter should be made public by the reporter who had attended in Chambers for a number of years. His Lordship, in answer, said the Judges had held that the proceedings at Chambers were not to be reported, and he could not give permission in the present case. It is understood that the Press will be excluded from the Chambers of all Court of Common, excluding the Divorce and Probate Courts."

THE OBX.—The following is a memorandum of the ore forwarded from Murrurundi Railway Station by W. H. Potts and Co. from 25th December to 31st:—Sydney Tin Mining Co., 16 tons 4 cwt. 2 qrs. 1 lb.; Bank New South Wales, 2 tons 15 cwt. 3 qrs. 1 lb. Total, 21 tons 3 cwt. 1 qr. 2 lbs.

INFANTICIDE.—On Wednesday last (the Bathurst Free Press reports) a magisterial inquiry was held at Wiseman's Creek, before Mr. H. M. Fisher, J.P., on the body of a female child found in the bush. A young woman, whose name is not given in the report, went to the house of a person named M'Kitt, where she was confined of a child. Nine days after the birth of the child this woman left with the infant for Bathurst. On Monday last the body of the child, on which the inquiry was being held was found near the stump of a tree by M'Kitt, who at once gave information to the police. The evidence of Dr. Eaton, who had made a post-mortem examination, went to show that the left parietal bone was completely knocked in on the brain; the body indicates that of a healthy female child

NEW YEARS DAY.

The accounts which follow show that the first day of the New Year was devoted to festivities, and that the holiday was everywhere observed, and apparently enjoyed. The good order which is characteristic of our public holidays prevailed. The weather was beautifully fine, and we have not heard of any accident of a serious nature to mar the pleasures of the day.

TATTERSALL'S ANNUAL RACE MEETING.

Patron: His Excellency Sir Hercules Robinson, K.C.M.G. Stewards: Messrs T. Ivory, R. Driver, T. Fagg, G. Robson, J. Fenwick, J. Curtis, G. Kiss, W. G. Hinchcy, L. Uhde. Judge: Richard Driver, M.L.A. Clerk of the course and starter: Mr. W. G. Hinchcy. Handicapper: Mr. George Cope. Treasurer: Mr. George Kiss.

One of the most successful meetings ever held by Tattersall's Club, in point of attendance and sport, took place yesterday at Randwick. There were many counter attractions, but the interest given to matters connected with the Turf by the patronage of his Excellency the Governor, has had a marked effect in increasing the popularity of Randwick, and, consequently of holiday makers yesterday wended their ways in the old convincing ground for an afternoon's enjoyment. The omnibus companies had made every preparation for the conveyance of passengers, and so perfect were the arrangements that nothing in the shape of a break-down occurred during the run out. With few exceptions each 'bus was drawn by four horses, and the way in which they rattled along the road must have been refreshing to those who stagnate when what it was once upon a time to get down and push behind. The road was in very good order, and as there was only a light breeze the dust was not inconsiderable to cause inconvenience. The Fourpaloon Club did not turn out on this occasion, and there was little novelty to break the monotonous line of "topes and hansoms. His Excellency the Governor, accompanied by Lady Robinson, Captain and Mrs. St. John, and Miss Robinson, reached the saddling paddock shortly before the Hurdle Race was run, and remained till the end of the meeting. The Colonial Secretary was also a member of the party, and, although not quite as conversant with Turf matters as Sir Hercules Robinson, appeared to watch the different contests with interest. To attempt a description of what took place in the shape of a movement outside the course would simply be going over well-trodden ground. Every part calculated to entice the loose silver out of the pockets of the spectators was to be seen in front of the Betty and Lager Stands; and the list letters, or itinerant betting men, were as prominent and persuasive as ever. There was a remarkable absence of card sharpers, and the police deserve credit for compelling these birds of prey to keep in the background. In the saddling paddock the bookmakers were pretty busy during the afternoon, and, besides being prepared for bets on the races of the day, vociferously assured the public that they were ready to on books upon events far distant. The German Band played an admirable selection of music, and their efforts were duly appreciated by the public. The absence of Isom O'Brien's familiar face behind the grand-stand bar was remarked by many, but it was understood that in regard to this particular speculation he had cried "enough," and gone in for enjoyment as one of the spectators. The popular Restaurant of Tattersall's had been so many years connected with the business of catering at Randwick that it was looked upon almost as an institution, the removal of which would endanger the stability of the old grand stand itself. His enterprising successor in the business of caterer is regretted by the frequenters of the saddling paddock, more especially as it will take some time for his successor to get the hang of the stands were well provided during each race, and there was an unusually large array of private carriages in the reserve. Messrs. Gibbs, Shallard, and Co., and Mr. James Harold, the secretary of the club, are to be complimented for the excellent race-cards issued by them, which were so arranged as to ensure a complete record of the winners of the various events, with the weights, names of jockeys, and other information likely to be valuable for reference. After the second race the luncheon took place, His Excellency the Governor taking the chair, with the Colonial Secretary on his right hand Mr. Richard Driver on his left. The usual loyal toasts having been duly honored, Mr. Driver proposed the health of his Excellency the Governor. The toast was received by those present with three hearty cheers.

His Excellency, in reply, spoke as follows:—Mr. Driver, I am much obliged to you for the kind terms in which you have proposed my health, and to you gentlemen for the marked cordiality with which you have responded to the toast. Nothing pleases me more in this splendid new country than to find that the people of New South Wales in their attachment to all good old English sports and amusements are through "chips of the old block." (Cheers.) In proof of this it is only necessary to glance round at what is taking place in Sydney and its neighbourhood on a great public holiday like the present. Your beautiful harbour is alive with yachts and yachtsmen, and members of the Sydney Club. The parks and open grounds are crowded with cricketers, all intent on doubt on the coming struggle with the All-England Eleven. The members of the Rifle Association are practising at the neighbouring butts, and striving by self-denial and application to qualify themselves for future intercolonial victories. On my way down here I paid a visit to the Albert Ground, where a Highland Gathering was going on, and where Scotchmen were proving that under the Southern cross they have lost none of that athletic skill and power for which their race is conspicuous in northern climes. (Hear, hear.) Whilst here on this picturesque racecourse, it is only necessary to look round to see that a large proportion of our community are warmly attached to the good old sport of horse-racing, and that Tattersall's meeting on New Year's Day is now fairly established as one of the popular institutions of the country. (Cheers.) For my part I rejoice at all this, because I hold that a taste for manly rational out-door amusements is essential to the formation of a sound, healthy, vigorous national character. (Hear, hear.) For the same reason, I think, that these well-meaning persons who discourage such enjoyments on the ground that they sometimes lead to abuses and excesses are injudicious and short-sighted in the views which they seek to enforce. (Hear, hear.) People will have amusements. They will seek recreation of one sort or another. You cannot prevent them; and, instead of anathematising such enjoyments and preaching them down as discreditable and demoralising—I say sympathise with them genially and heartily, and do what can be done to make them go off with moderation and propriety. (Cheers.) Never was better advice offered on this subject than that given by one of the best and most kindhearted of old English divines, who said: "Let the world have their May games and Whitsun ales—their concerts and dancings—their puppet-shows and holiday-horses—their bells and hobby-horses—and whatever sports and recreations please them best, so long as they be followed with discretion." (Cheers.) Concerning as I do thoroughly in this view, I have felt it to be not inconsistent with the obligations of my high office to strive, as I have done ever since my residence amongst you, to identify myself not only with the interests, but with the pleasures of the people. (Loud cheers.) As regards the particular amusement of horse-racing which we are met together here to-day to enjoy, I can only say, that it appears to me to be, when properly carried out, one of the most legitimate sports to which men of means can indulge. Some persons, no doubt, think differently; but I can quote against them the opinion of one of the greatest of living authorities on sporting questions, and one who has never himself been mixed up with the Turf in any way. I allude to Mr. Gladstone, the present Prime Minister of England, who said of racing, that "it is a noble, manly, distinguished, and in its history a decidedly national amusement." (Cheers.) Gentlemen, I am sure you will all agree with me that we are much indebted for our present gathering here to-day to the excellence of the arrangements, and I will therefore ask you to unite with me in drinking to the health of the stewards of the Tattersall's Races and success to their annual meeting. (Loud applause.)

The toast was vociferously applauded and appropriately responded to, after which the company separated, and went earnestly in search of the winner of the next event. The racing throughout was excellent, and Mr. Hanbury is to be congratulated upon his success with the flag. The judge, timekeeper, secretary, and other officials gave the most unqualified satisfaction. The following is a detailed account of the different events:

The Hunter's Handicap, of 50 sovereigns, or prize of the value (optional to winner), 5 sovereigns each; 1 sovereign forfeit; second horse to receive 10 sovereigns from the prize. Mine leaps over hurdles, 3 feet 9 inches. About 2½ miles.

Mr. J. Kent's b g Shakespere, aged (late Parasite) 10 st (M. Ryan) 1
Ryan's ch g Harlequin, aged 10 st 10 lbs (M. Ryan) 2

Betting: 7 to 4 on Shakespere.

Shakespere took up the running, but baulked at the first fence, and Harlequin obtained a long lead. Shakespere got over at the second attempt, but refusing the next flight of hurdles, and only negotiating them when asked a second time, his chance appeared hopless when about half the distance had been travelled. Harlequin struck most of the jumps, and Shakespere hit the fence at the distance very heavily, and nearly came down. Harlequin came to grief at the flight of hurdles near the half-mile post, and Shakespere, who had taken the lead, jumped the remaining hurdles in good style, and won easily by about 100 yards. Time, 4 minutes 30 seconds.

The Maiden Plate of 5 sovereigns each for starters, 100 sovereigns added, for all maiden horses (including winners of two-year-old stakes by carrying a penalty for winning—once, 5 lbs.; twice or more, 8 lbs.; in addition to any penalties incurred after entrance) at the time of entrance. Penalties for winning after entrance—once, 5 lbs.; twice or more, 7 lbs. Second horse, 10 sovereigns from the prize. 1½ miles. 24 entries.

Mr. R. Brown's b f Vivs, by Tattersall—Atalanta, 3 years, 7 st 1 lb (J. Sherrington) 1
T. Ivory's br s Sapling, by Yattendon—Balsam, 3 years, 8 st 2 lbs (Boffing 10 lbs penalty) (T. Bennett) .. 2
J. D. Little's b s King of the West, by Gemma di Vergy, 3 years, 7 st 4 lbs (Scanlan) 3
D. Rayner's gr g Lycurgus, 4 years, 8 st 11 lbs (T. Foy) .. 4
A. Alright's br s Excelsior, 3 years, 7 st 13 lbs, including 7 lbs penalty (G. Kent) 5
J. S. Smith's b h Speculation, 3 years, 7 st 12 lbs, including 7 lbs penalty (W. Duggan) 6
W. Scott's b g Wrangler, 3 years, 7 st 5 lbs (Bates) .. 7
Dr. Rowlands's ch g Lord of the Hills—Maid of the Lake, 3 years, 7 st 1 lb (Hurley) 8

Betting: 6 to 2 v. Excelsior; 2 to 1 v. Sapling; 4 to 1 each v. Vivs and Burwood; 5 to 1 v. any other.

A really grand start was effected at the second attempt, and the hit came round the Denison in a cluster, the colours of Speculation, King of the West, and Vivs showing most prominently. King of the West ran to the front at the distance, and led past the stand by two lengths, Lycurgus, Vivs, Burwood, Sapling, and Speculation next in a heap. Sir Solomon six lengths away next, and Sirlofty, who was slow to get going, last. Burwood went up to King of the West, at Cutts's, and getting to the front at the seven furlongs when passing the seven furlongs post, led along the flat of the course by a length, with Excelsior second, leading Speculation by half a length, King of the West and Lycurgus a length away next, and Sir Solomon and Sirlofty in close succession. Burwood held his advantage up the hill attended on by Excelsior, the others, save Sir Solomon, closely packed. At the beginning of the bend Burwood occupied, and Excelsior was left at the front closely attended upon by King of the West, Speculation, Sirlofty, and Vivs. Excelsior died away at the distance, and Speculation following suite, Sirlofty ran to the front, the best to him amongst the West and Vivs. Vivs headed King of the West a dozen lengths from home, and, coming with a great rush, caught Bennett napping! The Sirlofty got to Sirlofty's head, and, immediately of holiday makers yesterday wended their ways the old convincing ground for an afternoon's enjoyment. The omnibus companies had made every preparation for the conveyance of passengers, and so perfect were the arrangements that nothing in the shape of a break-down occurred during the run out. With few exceptions each 'bus was drawn by four horses, and the way in which they rattled along the road must have been refreshing to those who stagnate when what it was once upon a time to get down and push behind. DISINFECTANTS.

At a meeting of the Society of Medical Officers of Health held for London, the Medical Officer of Health for the city of London, delivered the following address on "Disinfectants."

"Dr. Letheby said he was induced to bring the subject under their consideration for the purpose of removing the many dangerous fallacies which beset it, and of asserting, if possible, the unblushing quackery, which disgraces it. A glance, indeed, at the so-called sanitary literature of the day would show how boldly and confidently the use of certain inert bodies were recommended to the public as powerful disinfections. The danger of that could not be overrated, for when by such means undue confidence was placed in the disinfecting power of an agent which failed in its purpose, the result was not merely a waste of material and a loss of valuable time, but it was also a serious danger to the public. Therefore it was that they should be most careful in the selection of disinfectants, using those only which were known to be effective. It was necessary also that they should be thoroughly conversant with their several modes of acting and that in applying them they should be guided by rational principles, suggested by the scientific aspects of the subject. It was hardly necessary to say that the question in all its relations was very large and extensive, for by the term "disinfection" he meant the removal, or neutralization, or destruction of that which was offensive to the senses or hurtful to the body—limiting it, of course, to those cases where offensive effluvia, or noxious matters, or specific contagia were the subjects of treatment; and here she might remark that although the questions before them were undoubtedly connected with the difficult problems now occupying the attention of physiologists, pathologists, and chymists as to the origin of infusorial life, and the cause of specific infectious maladies, as well as of organic decomposition, yet they were at the same time independent of those abstruse inquiries, as to be capable of very effective practical treatment at their hands without much reference to the conflicting theories of genesis. The destruction of the hurtful thing which caused offence or produced disease was effected in one of four ways first, by strengthening the affinities of organic substances, and thus enabling them to resist decay; secondly, by so acting upon them with chemical agents as to produce new compounds which were not susceptible of organization or decay; thirdly, by hurrying onward the changes of decomposition and oxydation, so that the particles might quickly arrive at their final stage of decay, and be brought to rest; and fourthly, by the use of special agents which were found to have specific powers of disinfection. As examples of the first of these methods of preventing decay, he might allude to the effect of cold and to the desiccation of organic matters. As instances of the second he would refer experimentally to the coagulation of albuminous matters by alcohol, creosote, the mineral acids, and most mineral salts. Under the third head were the oxydizing influences of chlorine, hypochlorous acid, permanganate of potash, and atmospheric air aided by water and porous substances; and as examples of the fourth method of disinfection, he might mention sulphurous acid, carbolic and cresylic acids and the volatile oils. These several disinfecting substances had very recently been examined by Dr. John Dougall, of Glasgow, and Dr. Crace Calvert, of Manchester, with the view of ascertaining their respective powers as tested by their action on protoplasmic and fungoid life, and on vaccine lymph. He had tabulated the principal results of those experiments, and submitted them to the society for examination. Dr. Letheby then went into a technical and experimental explanation on each point, which it would be difficult to make intelligible to the ordinary and non-professional reader. He concluded by asking the members to consider the question of how far the use of certain inert bodies were recommended to the public as powerful disinfections. The danger of that could not be overrated, for when by such means undue confidence was placed in the disinfecting power of an agent which failed in its purpose, the result was not merely a waste of material and a loss of valuable time, but it was also a serious danger to the public. Therefore it was that they should be most careful in the selection of disinfectants, using those only which were known to be effective. It was necessary also that they should be thoroughly conversant with their several modes of acting and that in applying them they should be guided by rational principles, suggested by the scientific aspects of the subject. It was hardly necessary to say that the question in all its relations was very large and extensive, for by the term "disinfection" he meant the removal, or neutralization, or destruction of that which was offensive to the senses or hurtful to the body—limiting it, of course, to those cases where offensive effluvia, or noxious matters, or specific contagia were the subjects of treatment; and here she might remark that although the questions before them were undoubtedly connected with the difficult problems now occupying the attention of physiologists, pathologists, and chymists as to the origin of infusorial life, and the cause of specific infectious maladies, as well as of organic decomposition, yet they were at the same time independent of those abstruse inquiries, as to be capable of very effective practical treatment at their hands without much reference to the conflicting theories of genesis. The destruction of the hurtful thing which caused offence or produced disease was effected in one of four ways first, by strengthening the affinities of organic substances, and thus enabling them to resist decay; secondly, by so acting upon them with chemical agents as to produce new compounds which were not susceptible of organization or decay; thirdly, by hurrying onward the changes of decomposition and oxydation, so that the particles might quickly arrive at their final stage of decay, and be brought to rest; and fourthly, by the use of special agents which were found to have specific powers of disinfection. As examples of the first of these methods of preventing decay, he might allude to the effect of cold and to the desiccation of organic matters. As instances of the second he would refer experimentally to the coagulation of albuminous matters by alcohol, creosote, the mineral acids, and most mineral salts. Under the third head were the oxydizing influences of chlorine, hypochlorous acid, permanganate of potash, and atmospheric air aided by water and porous substances; and as examples of the fourth method of disinfection, he might mention sulphurous acid, carbolic and cresylic acids and the volatile oils. These several disinfecting substances had very recently been examined by Dr. John Dougall, of Glasgow, and Dr. Crace Calvert, of Manchester, with the view of ascertaining their respective powers as tested by their action on protoplasmic and fungoid life, and on vaccine lymph. He had tabulated the principal results of those experiments, and submitted them to the society for examination. Dr. Letheby then went into a technical and experimental explanation on each point, which it would be difficult to make intelligible to the ordinary and non-professional reader. He concluded by asking the members to consider the question of how far the use of certain inert bodies were recommended to the public as powerful disinfectants

VIENNA UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.—A CROWNING VICTORY. The FIRST PRIZE. The HIGHEST HONOURS were conferred only on the WHEELER and WILSON COMPANY. In addition to the Grand Medals for Marked Progress and Merit, they were the only company who were awarded The GRAND DIPLOMA of HONOUR, for the highest perfection of their machines, and the GRAND ORDER of the EMPEROR of AUSTRIA, a particular distinction for Eminent Merit in the Domain of Science. It will be seen that Singer's Machines ranked in order amongst a lower class. We wish Singer's agent more enviable employment than trying to appropriate the Trophies of the Wheeler and Wilson Company by flooring first in the eyes of the public. It has been demonstrated that the Wheeler and Wilson machine will turn out 50 per cent. more work than Singer's, and has double the durability. Every WHEELER and WILSON MACHINE warranted to give satisfaction. BEWARE of IMITATIONS. LONG and CO., Agents, 387, George-street.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS, and NEW YEAR GIFTS. CHRISTMAS PRESENTS. UNDER DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE. PROFESSOR THOMSON'S BOTANIC OINTMENT, PURELY HERBAL. PROTECTED BY LETTERS PATENT, TO COUNTERFEIT WHICH IS FELONY. THIS OINTMENT is patronized by the Aristocracy of ENGLAND, the UNITED STATES, and CANADA. It has stood the test of public opinion for many years in nearly all the civilized countries of the earth. THE BOTANIC OINTMENT IS A CERTAIN and SPEEDY REMEDY for piles, ulcers, old wounds and sores, bad or long standing; coins, abscesses, bad breasts, sore or inflamed eyes, bad legs, tumours, boils, itch, pimples, sore shins, chapped hands, sore throats, ringworm, scald head, scrofulous sores, and any disease of the skin. Sold in pots, 1s., 1s. 6d., and 2s. 6d. each. Testimonials from the same are daily offered by Professor THOMSON'S entirely pure Herbal Medicines. The GREATEST BOON ever conferred upon suffering humanity was Professor THOMSON'S entirely pure herbal preparations. TRY THEM. Ask for these extraordinary preparations, purely herbal, and take no other. Their effect is rapid, and they will restore you to health and strength. We have much pleasure in publishing the following testimonials:— Derwent-street, November 12th, 1873. Messrs. Myers and Solomon. Gentlemen,—I am very pleased to inform you that PROFESSOR THOMSON'S BOTANIC OINTMENT, which you recommended me to try for a very severe wound in my finger, caused by catching it on an iron hook, which broke the fleshy part of the top of my finger nearly off, has entirely cured it. After a few applications it completely healed up. I positively assert that it is the most marvellous OINTMENT that I ever tried, and I recommend it in all confidence to the public as an invaluable remedy for any severe wounds.—Sgt. Chase. Gerard-street, Alexandria, November 2a, 1873. Three years ago a small wound came into my leg, caused by upsetting boiling it, which grew till it was the size of the palm of my hand. I was recommended Zino Ointment, which closed the wound, but I feel hardly say that it broke out with more virulence than ever, and the bone of the leg became visible. Getting alarmed I placed myself under the doctor for over twelve months to no purpose whatever, in fact the leg got so bad that I was obliged to leave my work. I tried many well known ointments without effect, and also everything which any one would recommend me, but it was all the same. One day I was talking to a friend of mine who had had very bad legs which were healed with the BOTANIC OINTMENT, he told me to try it, which I did, the result being that my leg is now sound, and is perfectly sound, and clear of a sore of nearly three years' standing. I think that the invaluable properties of the BOTANIC OINTMENT should be made known to the public, and therefore hand you this testimonial.—(Signed) B. FITNAN. To Mr. Parkes. St. Peters, October 30, 1873. Dear Sir,—Having had a fall from the brick-kiln, my head was severely cut, and the skin torn off the side of one of my feet. I purchased a pot of PROFESSOR THOMSON'S BOTANIC OINTMENT. The swellings were reduced, and the wounds closed after one dressing; after four other dressings the wounds were healed up. You can publish this for the benefit of the public, as I can recommend THOMSON'S BOTANIC OINTMENT with every confidence.—T. THOMAS BURNELL. To Mr. F. C. Parkes. Oberon, Sep. 17, 1873. Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in testifying to the value of the BOTANIC OINTMENT you are so extensively introducing in these parts. For some time past I had severe wounds on both my face and hands, but about three applications of this really wonderful preparation (PROFESSOR THOMSON'S BOTANIC OINTMENT) completely healed all. I cannot therefore too strongly recommend the same.—J. M. PULLEN. To Mr. Parkes. Botany, October 30, 1873. Dear Sir,—There must be something extraordinary in the properties of PROFESSOR THOMSON'S COUGH PILLS, for part of a small box of them cured me of a cough that had settled on my chest the beginning of last winter, from which I suffered great inconvenience, and I acknowledge with pleasure the benefit I have derived from them. In using Professor THOMSON'S LIVER PILLS, although they make me a little sick until their effects have worked off, all the remedies that I have ever tried for the dreadful headaches I used to suffer this has been the only one from which I have derived any lasting benefit. G. SHALLEY. Glentwyr, Fish River Creek, 6, 11, '73. Mr. Parkes. Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in acknowledging the benefit I and several of my friends have received from the use of PROFESSOR THOMSON'S LIVER PILLS, and will confidently recommend them to any one similarly afflicted with liver complaint.—ELIZABETH WEALIN. Mr. Parkes. Cook's River, October 15, 1873. Sir,—For two years before I took of PROFESSOR THOMSON'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS I bought of you have entirely cured me of constipation, and the frightful pain I suffered under the bowel continually, and I must say that I have better health now than I have had for years, through taking these pills. My wife was a victim in what some people call bilious colic. I gave her a few of the pills; now she testifies to me that her ailments are no more. If people could only know the value of these herbal medicines, they would soon use them.—THOMAS BYRNE. Mutton Falls, November 1, 1873. Mr. F. C. Parkes. Dear Sir,—As regards the INDIGESTION PILLS you gave me, we are happy to inform you that your pills have been of great service to my brother, his wife, and myself, and we can highly recommend these pills to any person suffering from indigestion or dyspepsia in all its varied stages. (Signed) JOHN M'ALLEN. WILSON M'ALLEN. MARTHA M'ALLEN. Corner of Elizabeth and Bedford streets, Nov. 1, 1873. Mr. F. C. Parkes. "Will you kindly send me a fresh supply of your invaluable GERMICIDE SOLVENT. I have much pleasure in informing you that under its application my corns have disappeared, and those I have sold it to spoke most highly of it. M. F. ROAN. Mr. Parkes. St. Peters, October 30, 1873. Dear Sir,—The lady that I sold the EYE LOTION to (Professor Thomson's), informs me that after one application her eyes got better, having removed the inflammation, and her eyes are now quite well. You can use this for the benefit of the public as you think most. WILLIAM HUNTER. Derwent-street, Glebe, November 28, 1873. Messrs. Myers and Solomon. Gentlemen,—I have had again occasion to prove the value of THOMSON'S BOTANIC OINTMENT, and I am pleased to say with marked success. A few days ago some of my children had a severe fall, causing her arm from the elbow to the wrist, the ointment was at once applied, which had the effect of reducing the pain considerably, and after three dressings the arm was completely healed. I should recommend all parents to keep it by them in case of accident, as it is simply invaluable.—G. T. CRAN. MYERS and SOLOMON, Sole Agents.
